

A
DISCOURSE

Concerning a Guide in Controversies,

I N
Two LETTERS.

Written to
One of the Church of Rome,

B Y
A Person lately Converted from that Communion.

The Second Edition.

EDINBURGH:
Printed in the Year M. DCC. XXVIII.

DISCOURSE

Concluding

Given in Church

TWO LETTERS

Written to

One of the Church of Rome

By

A Person lately converted from
that Communion

The Second Edition

LONDON
Printed in the Year M D C C XXVI

T

one,
Rom
with Chun
the G recei ject
the
that impa Auth
tion
Bu
Judg
of the
and ness
seek have large

The PREFACE.

THE Ingenious Author of these Papers being not easily prevailed with to permit the Publication of them, I am not at liberty to inform the Reader any farther, than that they were writ by one, who had been many Tears of the Church of Rome, but having been for some time dissatisfy'd with several Doctrines and Practices in that Church, had resolv'd to examine, with great Care, the Grounds of that Authority on which they were receiv'd, by consulting the best Books on that Subject on both Sides, and by advising with Men of the best Judgments of both Communions: And that these Papers were the Result of those free and impartial Enquiries, designed only to impart the Author's Thoughts to a Friend, without any Intention of making them Publick.

But falling into the Hands of some very good Judges, as well Divines as others, the publishing of them was very much desired, both for the Strength and Clearness of the Reasoning, and for the Shortness of them; many Readers being encourag'd to seek for Information in Pieces of this Size; who have neither the Mind nor the Leisure to go thro' large Volumes.

They

The P R E F A C E.

They are, I think, writ with that Judgment, and withal with that Plainness, that they may be at all Times useful to those of our own Communion, that want to be fortified against the bold Pretences to Infallibility by the Church of Rome; and will, I hope, help to open the Eyes of such of the Romish Communion as are persuaded, that those who deny that Infallibility, take away all Certainty of the Christian Religion, or of the Authority of the Scriptures, the Grounds of those Pretences being the chief Subject of these Letters.

It might have been expected that the Answer writ by one of the Romish Persuasion to the First Letter, should have been printed, with the Reply; and indeed I wish that could have been done, for preventing all Cavils and Exceptions, but it seems it was return'd (after the Reply was writ) upon the Request of the Gentleman that brought it, before any Copy was taken of it. But however there is the less need of it, since I am persuaded the full Force of the Arguments is plainly and fairly set down in the Reply.

I need say no more concerning the Author or the Performance; I pray God it may have the good Effect, to excite all Sorts of Persons of what Persuasion soever, seriously and impartially to enquire into the Grounds and Reasons of their Religion as this Author has done: for it is not only the most rational Method for finding out Truth, but what is indispensably required of us by Revelation; where we are enjoyn'd to prove all things in order to the holding fast that which is good.

T W O
L E T T E R S

Concerning a
Guide in Controversies.

The First L E T T E R.

To Mr. B-----t a Romish Priest.

S I R,

Thank you for the Favour of your Books, which I return, having read that concerning the Guide in Controversies twice with all the Attention I am capable of, and with all the Impartiality I could, under so strong a Bias as all naturally have for that Side which they have deliberately and publickly made their free Choice. I was not indeed inclined to resolve

resolve against Doubting, tho' told it is a mortal Sin; for I am persuaded nothing can be so, that is out of our Power, as not to doubt of a thing which we see great Reason to doubt of, surely is: However, that Maxim gives great Prejudice against those who hold it, as the best Security of Error, and the most effectual Bar against the Discovery of Truth; for which a very different Disposition is requisite, viz. A readiness to submit to the Evidence of Truth, how opposite soever to all our present Persuasions. And in this Disposition I have endeavour'd to keep my self on that important Enquiry, Whether the Proofs of an infallible Guide are sufficiently full and clear to satisfy an unprejudic'd Mind; as I heartily wish to find them. In order to judge the better of my Thoughts on this Subject, give me leave, S I R, to represent to you freely what I think is the Sum of your Author's Arguments, what Defect I observe in them, and what seems to me the only Ground on which the Belief of an Infallible Guide can be establish'd. I begin with the last, by laying down this Position.

That there can be no Reason to ascribe Infallibility to any Man, or Assembly of Men, but an express Divine Promise; and that those to whom such a Grant is made, can can neither Limit, or Extend, Transfer or Dispose it, in any Manner, or to any Persons; but it must be fix'd in those only who are expressly separated and distinguish'd by that Promise. This being laid down, which I believe will be granted me, we are next to consider with your Author, What is the Importance of those Places in Scripture in which that Promise is said to be contained, and to whom they must be applied. Our Saviour's Promises, he says. (all or most of them) are made to the Guides of the Church, and therefore to the Church as a Guide; a Consequence which shall be farther considered by and by. But here I must observe, That several of them seem evidently limited to the Apostles, as those in which are join'd the Promise of guiding them into all Truth, and that of shewing them things to come: From which I see no more Reason to infer a Succession of Infallibility, than a Succession of Prophecy; but both seem equally to belong to that extraordinary Inspiration which was necessary for the first Promulgators of the Gospel. If it is thought necessary to extend those other Promises farther, of our Saviour's being with them to the End of the World, and of the Spirit's abiding with them for ever, (tho' these Expressions are frequently used in Scripture, when they cannot be taken in their full Ex-

Page. 4.

John 16.

13.

Matth.

28. 20.

John 14.

16.

Matth.
18. 17.

Matth.
16. 18.

tent, as no doubt you know ; but) to whom soever they may be extended, they are far from importing Infallibility, as may be seen in several Places, where they are used for those ordinary Assurances, and Protections, which God has promis'd to all his People ; every good Christian may hope and pray that God will be with them for ever. As for that Injunction, Tell the Church, &c. I cannot but wonder to find it always urg'd on this Subject ; for I think nothing can be plainer, than that it does not at all belong to it, when the whole Scope of the Discourse is taken together from the 15th Verse, If thy Brother trespass against thee, &c. Our Saviour is plainly speaking of private Differences among Christians, which he wou'd have them first endeavour to make up between themselves, then to try the Interposition of Friends ; and lastly, to refer the Matter to the whole Body ; and if any one was not to be gain'd by such amicable Methods, he might be look'd on, or us'd as a Heathen, i. e. prosecuted in Temporal Courts. From which Discourse if any Authority of the Church is to be inferr'd, it must be to decide Civil Controversies, and Private Quarrels. The only Text, I think, that contains an exprefs Promise to the Church is this, On this Rock will I build my Church, and the Gates of Hell shall not

not neces
Pow
Chur
fying
Bu
Chur
(whi since is o
may some
the C fallib
give fion
ing
ther
with to u then
A
also sent whi
Dod
thei
is to
It b Pro
to k

not prevail against it; which seems not necessarily to import more than that no Power should ever be able to destroy Christ's Church; the Word render'd prevail, signifying (as I am told) an intire Victory.

But supposing that Text to mean that the Church shou'd never fall into any Error, (which sure is very darkly express'd in it) since this cannot be universally extended, as is own'd by all, but that great Numbers may and have err'd; I am still to search for some Direction, whom in any Division of the Church I may adhere to as a Guide Infallible; and for this Christ has certainly given us a Rule, if your Author's Conclusion is true, that most of the Promises being made to the Guides of the Church; therefore to the Church as a Guide; for without such a Rule, this can be no Rule to us, when those Guides are divided among themselves. Page 21.

And on this Occasion, he says, It seems also evident, that Christians in such dissenting of Governors may not safely follow which they please, or judge to be in their Doctrine the rightest; for so they judge of their Judges. But that some Rule there is to whom in such Case they are to adhere: It being as necessary for the same Divine Providence to leave some Means by which to know our Guide, as to give us One. Page 100
Thus

Thus He. And this indeed is evidently necessary, if the other Part is true, That Christians may not judge for themselves in such Dissentions among Governors. But where is this Rule to be found? This is what we are in Search of; but of this the Scriptures are entirely silent, give not the least Hint of any Person, or Number of Persons, whom, in case of Divisions, all Christians are obliged to follow: But your Author tells us, That this Rule by Tradition has been, and, in Reason, can be no other but this, That in Judges Ecclesiastical subordinate (whether Persons or Councils) dissenting, Men ought to adhere to the Superior; in Judges equal dissenting, to adhere to the Major, not to the Minor Part.

Allowing this to have been by Tradition the only Rule, as I doubt not that it may in Reason be the best that any Body of Men can fix on for the maintaining of Peace and Order; yet if this is not a Divine Institution, what Reason can assure me, that in all Dissentions of the Church, the superiour in Dignity or Number must be in the right? Which is far from being true of any other Body of Men. But that this Rule is of Divine Institution, I find no Appearance of a Proof, and methinks that Assertion of your Author seems to suppose the contrary, viz. That in Reason there can be no other. Cou'd
he

he have shewn us that in Fact this Rule was given us by God, no Body would have doubted the Reasonableness of it ; but by this he cannot mean that God cou'd not in reason have given us any other : (For who can deny, that if he had been pleased to distinguish any determined Succession of Men, how few, or of what Dignity soever, by a Promise of Infallibility, it wou'd have been a very good Rule for us to adhere to Him or Them, even against the whole World :) What then can he mean, but that this is the only Rule that Human Reason can fix on ; an Argument which can amount to no more than a Fitness or Necessity of submitting to Superiors, or the Majority of a Council, for the Security of Order and Union ; (which are indeed very valuable Things, and not lightly to be thrown off :) But a Submission to them can be no infallible Security from Error ; and therefore we cannot be absolutely in all Things obliged to such Submission, without an exprefs Divine Promise, that those Pastors who are superior in Dignity, or the Majority of those who shall happen to be assembled in a Council, shall never err. But to such a Divine Promise I find no Pretence, nor to any Direction from Christ or his Apostles whom to follow as a Guide in case of Divisions : The Promises in Scripture are by no Side carried farther than to collect collect from them, that the whole Church, or all the Guides of the Church shall never fall into Error: But since those who shall not err are not distinguish'd, to Us, from those who may, should we not conclude, contrary to your Author, that therefore those Promises to the Guides of the Church, are not meant to the Church as a Guide? For methinks, his Conclusion [That they are so meant,] is very well confuted by himself, where he says, He that appoints us to Page 18. follow a Guide ——— and then leaves us no way (when our Guide consists of many Persons ——— and when two Parties of them contradict one another) ——— to know which of them is to be our Guide, it is all one as if he left us no Guide. From which this Reasoning closely follows; But God has given us no Direction how to know our Guide, Ergo, He has, (or it is all one as if he had) given us no Guide. Nor does your Author here, or elsewhere, offer to shew that God has given us any Rule by which to know this Guide; but here from a Concession of some Protestants, that there shall be always some Pastors of the Church unerring, he argues, That these (unless allowed to be the Superior or Major Part) can be of no use as a Guide to the whole; which no Protestants maintain them to be, all affirm that there is no infallible Guide but the Scrip-

Scriptures : Yet, as if it were granted that those unerring Pastors were to be a known appointed Guide, he concludes that his must be the Rule by which to know this Guide ; but gives us no better Proof that this is our Rule, than in the other Place, sends us to Human Reason and Probabilities ; For it is more likely, says he, that a particular Page 19: Person shou'd err than a Synod ; and a smaller Synod than a more general ; and so too of Persons subordinate, that those elected and advanced to higher Places of Judicature, should be both Persons of greater Knowledge and Merit ; and, according to the Necessity of their Place, Divinely more assisted. Not to urge that this has been far otherwise in Fact, (as it is too sure, that several of those advanced to the highest Rank in the Church have been very ill, and very ignorant Men) let it be as likely as he pleases, how far does this fall short of that Security, which we look for in a Guide infallible, by an express Divine Promise ?

But Why else (continues he) such a Subordination and Appeal from lower to higher Courts, unless these be of the two the less liable to Error, both from Human and Divine Help ? To which I answer, That nobody denies that the Church might cast it self into such a Model for very good Ends, relating to Order and Discipline ; but how
In.

Infallibility can be infer'd from thence, I do not see: For, first, I cannot find that those Subordinations, upon which such Appeals are founded, are so much as pretended to be of Divine or Apostolical Institution (as that of inferior Clergy to their Bishop is;) but for those other, of Bishops to their Metropolitan, and of Metropolitans to Patriarchs, they seem Distinctions merely flowing from the former Disposition of the Roman Empire, and the temporal Dignity of Cities; as new Privileges were given to the Bishop of Constantinople, upon that City's being made the Seat of the Empire. But secondly, If these Subordinations were all of Divine Institution, and allowing the higher of the two the less liable to Error, how does that, or the constant Practice in the Church, of appealing accordingly from lower to higher Courts, any more prove the Majority of a General Council Infallible (without an express Promise for it) than the like Constitution of other Bodies proves the highest Court of them to be Infallible, or than it proves every Metropolitan, or every Bishop to be so, because all under their respective Jurisdictions are obliged to obey them. But your

Page 17. Author had told us before, That this being the traditive Rule of Obedience, which has been always observed in the Church, if our Saviour's Promises of Assistance import on- ly (shall how is u ing trad to o deni who gum Prot Rule man thof depa Scrip low than ty'd by I want amon ors missi time whic T thon Cou noun act

ly (as some Protestants affirm) That there shall be always some Clergy unerring, but how few, or of what Dignity they may be is uncertain; Then the People in following the superior and the major Part (the traditive Rule) will thus be ty'd sometimes to obey those of the Clergy to whom Christ denies such Assistance, and to disobey those who have it. Which is the Sum of his Argument in that Page. But therefore (say all Protestants) the People are not tied to this Rule of Obedience in all Cases: 'Tis a Human Constitution; and whenever any of those, (tho' otherwise their lawful Superiors) depart from their sole infallible Rule, the Scriptures, the People are not obliged to follow them; for they must obey God rather than Man. If he means that the People are ty'd to this Rule of Obedience in all Cases by Divine Authority, 'tis that of which we want a Proof; if not, his Conclusion will amount to no more, than that such Superiors requiring an universal and absolute Submission to their Decrees, will thus sometimes tye the People to submit to Error; which his Adversaries will easily grant him.

The only Argument I find in your Author for the Divine Authority of a General Council, is this, That the Church-Governours, when ever assembled in Council, do act by the self same Authority (received from from our Lord, and by their Divine Institution) by which they act singly, in their several Charges:— What Authority then, and whence they had it singly, they have united.— And so much I believe not only Dr. Hammond, whom he quotes, but all of the Church of England will own; But is this Authority absolute and unlimited, in Matters of Faith, or is it not? If it be, then every one will be obliged to obey their several Bishops, how much soever they differ from one another; if it be not unlimited, as sure it is not, since every single Bishop may err (as is confels'd by all) and in such Case the People cannot be bound to obey; then neither is it so, when they are united, for they act by the self same Authority, when assembled, by which they act singly: But how high soever the Authority of Bishops may be, this is not the Institution we look for, nor will it help us in our Search whom to follow, when they are divided among themselves: The Divine Authority we are enquiring for, is that of a Primate over many inferior Bishops, or of a Majority of them over a lesser Number, with a Promise that such shall not err; and in case the greater Number of Inferior Bishops should dissent from their Superiors in Dignity; on which Side the Infallibility should rest, or to whom the People must adhere. But of such such a Divine Authority, Promise, or Direction. I do not find that any Proof is offered.

Nor does your Author mention this last Case at all, of a Majority dissenting from their Superiors, though this not only may, but has happen'd. And if it is not determined which of them, in such Case, is the infallible Guide, the People will be left uncertain whom to follow, or according to their different Opinions about it, may have a very different Rule of Faith.

And is it to be thought that a Living Infallible Guide was design'd us, and yet, that neither our Saviour, or his Apostles should say one Word of any Rule, how to know this Guide in case of Dissentions, nor give the least Direction how that Body should be constituted, which was to have so great a Privilege as Infallibility; either of what Persons it should consist, or what Number of Votes, or what Acceptation should be necessary to make its Decrees obligatory? About all which so many obvious Doubts may be rais'd, and these not the Cavils of a captious Enemy; for several Councils are rejected even by the Church of Rome, and how can we certainly know, that they had not a Title to Infallibility, and a Right to be obeyed, or that those others may not as well be rejected, without some stated Rules of what is sufficient to give a Council the Authority of a General One, since none of them have been strictly such.

But no Direction being left us by Christ or his Apostles, about this so important a Matter, is it not reasonable to conclude, That their Writings are the only Rule they design'd us, by which we are to (try the Spirits) examine all Doctrines, and as they agree, or not to that Rule, accordingly to receive, or reject them; which if it resolve at last into every Man's private Judgment, is it not vain to urge Absurdities or Inconveniences from that? For without proving that God has given us another determin'd Guide, this is only arguing, that he shou'd have done something which he has not done.

But why is it thought so necessary for us to be more infallibly secured from Error, than from Sin? which seems more opposite to the Purity of God, and more prejudicial to Mankind; what Absurdity is there in thinking, that God has left our Understanding as free as our Will? And if Men had done so too, what Inconvenience would have followed from it? Those Divisions that are now among Christians, seem not the necessary Consequence of a Diversity in Opinions, but of Mens having made the Terms of Communion straiter than God has made the Terms of Salvation, otherwise all Christians, who agree in those important Truths which are

are Essentials of the Covenant of Grace, might have been of one Heart, and of one Communion, notwithstanding their Differences about other Things; as we see the Dominicans and Jesuits are, though the Matter in Dispute between them, seems of much greater Consequence than many of those Things for which Churches are unhappily divided from one another: From which may I not conclude, That those Disorders (for the Prevention of which, an Infallible Determiner of all Controversies is urg'd as necessary) are so far from being the Effects of Mens judging for themselves, that they manifestly proceed from their not being left at Liberty to do so, as the Dominicans and Jesuits are, in the Contest between them; and that therefore if God has not required that all controvertible Matters shou'd be determined, he has left us a more effectual Way to Peace and Union, viz. By bearing with one another in such Things; than he had done by appointing such an undetermin'd Judge of them, as about whom the greatest Controversy may be rais'd.

If it is urg'd, that thus many Errors will get into the Church, which is contrary to our Saviour's Promises; I ask how it can be prov'd more inconsistent with the Promise, that the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against the Church, that some Errors shou'd be in it, or that the greatest part of it shou'd err, than that many Sins shou'd so widely prevail in it, as we see they do? Or, how can it be said, that the Gates of Hell prevail against the Church, whilst it retains all Truths necessary to Salvation? For though with them there shou'd be a Mixture even of dangerous Errors, whilst Faith in Christ, and Repentance for the Remission of Sins, are maintain'd, they will prove as it were Antidotes against the Malignity of them: For if Men sincerely endeavour to know the Truth, and ask Pardon for all their involuntary Mistakes, what Reason is there to doubt that David's Prayer will be accepted for such Errors, as well as for the Sins, which without our own Fault we are ignorant of? (Oh cleanse thou me from all my secret Sins.)

This, Sir, seems to me no irrational Scheme of Religion: But whatever Objections may be urg'd against it, they can be of no Force, if God has given us no other. If Men will abuse their Liberty of searching in the Scriptures whether these Things are so, every one must account for himself at his own Peril. But what greater Safety can they have by submitting to the Decrees of a Council, though seeming to them contrary to the Word of God, when they have no Command from him for such a Submission, than than they have in following some few Pastors; who they think adhere more closely to their confes'd Rule, The Scriptures.

Much rather indeed, most gladly wou'd I submit to an infallible Interpreter of God's appointing, if such a one I cou'd find; but I must conclude with my first Position, which is the Ground I have all along proceeded on, That there can be no Reason to ascribe Infallibility to any Man or Assembly of Men, but an Express Divine Promise, &c. If, S I R, you can shew me either that this Position is false, or admitting it true, can prove that our Saviour has given us any Promise or Direction where that Infallibility which is said to be in the diffusive Body of the Church, shall be found in case of Divisions; 'twill extreamly rejoyce me to see it plainly done: But I have found nothing like it in your Author. 'Tis true, I have not in this Paper examined every Particular in his Book, or gone through it methodically, being loth to give you so tedious a Trouble; nor was it needful to my Purpose, which is not to answer him: But I have, to the best of my Understanding, taken the Strength of all his direct Arguments for an infallible Guide, and am much mistaken if any of his Arguments amount to more than a Fitness, or sit in a Necessity of submitting to Superiors, as respects Order; or, on the other Hand, Ab-furdities, or rather Inconveniencies in Mens being left to judge for themselves: Both which I have considered in these Lines. And as I am induced to this Search by the same unprejudic'd Love of Truth that brought me first to you, I hope you will receive and answer this with the same Condescension and Charity you then had for me, who am and ever shall be with Respect,

S I R,

Your most humble Servant.

The

The Second

LETTER

To Mr. H--- who had procured an Answer to the foregoing Letter from a Stranger to the Author,

S I R,

I Am sorry Mr. B---'s Indisposition hindered him from answering my Letter, and thank you for the Pains you were at in getting another to do it. The whole Force of the Arguments urged in the Answer you brought me, which are enlarg'd on in several Paragraphs, and frequently resum'd, may be reduc'd to two Propositions; by which, my Reply to them will be the less tedious, and the more clear.

The First, That my Objections against a living Infallible Guide, equally overthrow the Infallibility of Scripture it self: Which is the Subject of the Sections mark'd 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.
is

The Second, That Protestants (the Church of England in particular) receiving not only the uncontroverted but the controverted Books of Scripture, on the Infallible Authority of the Church; and the Decisions of the four first General Councils as the Decisions of the Holy Ghost: They must own, that there was a living Infallible Guide after the Decease of the Apostles. And if there was such a Guide for 500 Years, there is no imaginable Ground to affirm that it was not to continue for ever; nor any Reason, whilst they own that the Church is infallible in her Decisions concerning Scripture, to deny that she is so in other things. Part of which is urg'd in the Section mark'd 7; and the whole is variously insisted on in several other Places.

Now to all that is said on this last Head, I need only give this short Answer: That it proceeds upon a wrong Supposition, and therefore the Argument built on it falls to the Ground, having no Foundation. But the Gentleman observes that I was aware of that Inference, viz. That there is as good Reason to believe succeeding Councils infallible as the four first; and therefore, he says, I urg'd, that no Council yet has been strictly a general one. What this (which was

was said he take the Pu
not ima
not aw
had no receive an Infa
of the
the Ho
cils fo
they fi
do not ry of Churc
ticle,
erred
that t
to Sa Auth
they a
as for writt
of th ly aff
are v tinuc
them
whor
impo first was said on a very different occasion, which he takes no Notice of) cou'd have been to the Purpose of avoiding his Inference, I cannot imagine; but he may be assured I was not aware of an Inference which I knew he had no Ground for. Protestants do not receive the Scriptures from the Church as an Infallible Authority, nor the Decisions of the four first Councils as the Decisions of the Holy Ghost; they reverence those Councils for the Sake of their Doctrine, which they find deducible from the Scriptures; but do not believe the Doctrine on the Authority of the Councils, according to what the Church of England declares in her 21st Article, That General Councils may and have erred in Things pertaining to God; and that things ordained by them as necessary to Salvation, have neither Strength nor Authority, unless it may be declared that they are taken from the Scriptures. And as for the Scriptures, they are believed to be written by inspir'd Men, on the Testimony of the Church, not as a Body extraordinarily assisted by the Holy Ghost, but as they are vast Companies of Men, who in a continued Succession of many Ages have handed them down to us, as Books written by those whose Names they bear; it being morally impossible that those to whom they were at first delivered, cou'd have receiv'd and believ'd liev'd them, if they had not known the great Matters of Fact contain'd and appeal'd to in them to be true; which Facts sufficiently prov'd their Authors to be inspired: And as little is it possible that their Successors cou'd have corrupted those Books, which were Read, Copied, Translated, and Dispers'd into so many Hands, in all Ages of Christianity.

As for the controverted Books, neither are they receiv'd on the Authority of any Judgment or Sentence pass'd on them, but on the same moral Arguments on which the Councils judg'd them to be Canonical; as their being mention'd for such by the earliest Christian Writers (which the Book of Revelations in particular is) the Number of Hands in which they were, and the Conformity of their Doctrine with those Books which had never been question'd, but were constantly quoted and appeal'd to on both Sides, in all the Disputes that happen'd among Christians about other things.

On these Grounds Protestants think they are sufficiently, if not infallibly certain of the infallible Authority of the Scriptures.

And that they may thus be sufficiently certain that they ought to submit to an Authority as infallible, the Gentleman must grant, whether he will have the Scriptures believ'd on the Authority of the Church as
in.

infallible, or the Church on the Authority of the Scriptures ; for one of them must be received on a moral Certainty, unless he will argue in a Circle, proving both by each other, which he knows will prove neither : This then, I doubt not, he will grant me, That the Grounds on which Protestants believe the Scriptures, may give a sufficient Certainty that we ought to submit to an Authority as Infallible.

And now I suppose the Gentleman will think he has me at great Advantage, and that to be consistent with my self, I must retract my Position, viz. That there can be no Reason to ascribe Infallibility to any Man or Assembly of Men, but an express divine Promise, &c. The Question then is, Whether the Cases are alike ; which leads me to examine his first Proposition, viz. That my Objections against a Living Infallible Guide, equally overthrow the Authority of Scripture it self. A Proposition which if he had made good, I shou'd be extreamly sorry for it, because there is this Unhappiness in it, that instead of proving the Authority of the Church, it would only prove, that the Authority of Church and Scripture are equally uncertain ; a sort of Arguments, which I wish none would make use of, but those who design to overthrow Christianity it self ; which I would by no Means suppose pose to be the Gentleman's Aim, notwithstanding his hard Insinuations of me: But let any one judge whether his Reasoning or mine tends most to that consequence.

In examining the Arguments for a Living Infallible Guide (a Point deny'd by the greater Number of Christians) I all along suppos'd the Authority of the Scriptures as a common Principal agreed on by them all, thinking that Agreement a sufficient Foundation for the Christian Religion, whatever become of the Point in Dispute: On the other Hand, the Gentleman being to maintain that disputed Point, the Authority of the Church as an infallible Guide, turns my Objections against it, against the Authority of the Scriptures, and then, instead of shewing the Weakness of those Objections, he only hopes I will grant they prove too much, but is so far from shewing that they do so, that all the rest of his Discourse is founded on a Supposition that those Arguments are good against the Scriptures, that their Authority must be dubious, unless they are believ'd on the Infallible Authority of the Church: And if so, will not the Authority of the Church (which is denied by the greater Part of Christians) be at least as dubious as that of the Scriptures, for Want of another Infallible Authority to support our Belief of it? And so adieu both the Church of

of Rome
Yet do
designin
but the
of the
gument against have fu tho'th
had be from
be equ
bility
have Argum
ons
cause
pture could clear
Guid
the
have
and my enou (as i
If th
cessi tain
ptur

of Rome's, and the Christian Rule of Faith. Yet do I not uncharitably censure him of designing this Consequence, obvious as it is, but there was no Way to avoid it, but one of these two, either by shewing that my Arguments as retorted by him, were not good against the Scriptures, but that we might have sufficient Certainty of their Authority, tho' the Church were not infallible; which had been too dangerous a Concession, (tho' from thence he had urged, that we might be equally certain of the Church's Infallibility on the same Grounds) for this would have wholly taken off the Force of his main Argument, for our receiving all the Decisions of the Church as Infallible, viz. because we must receive her Decisions of Scripture as such; But, what is worse, if he could not have produc'd a Tradition equally clear and universal, for a Living Infallible Guide, as for the Inspiration of Scripture, the Authority of this Guide would again have been referred to a Trial by Scripture; and so we had been where we were, and all my Arguments might still have been strong enough against such a Guide, however weak (as indeed they are) against the Scriptures. If therefore he would not make this Concession, that we may have a sufficient Certainty of the Divine Authority of the Scriptures, without believing the Church Infallible lible, the only other Means he had to avoid the Consequence of taking away all Certainty both of Church and Scripture, was to give a plain Reason why the Doctrine of an Infallible Guide was more capable of Certainty, and of being convey'd thro' a Course of many Ages clearly and unalterably, than the Books of Scripture; or to affirm, that in Fact it had been so; a Proposition which he would have found very difficult to maintain. But on that Supposition his whole Discourse must be founded; for since he plainly denies that we can be certain of the Divine Authority of the Scriptures, unless the Church is infallible, (accusing me of having made their Authority dubious by attacking her Infallibility) he must then suppose that we may be more certain, by Tradition of the Divine Authority of the Church, than we can be of the Scriptures; unless, as I said, he will take away all Certainty of either, and so overthrow Christianity it self.

This then is the right State of the Question between us, Whether the Infallibility of the Church, as now taught by the Church of Rome, or the Divine Authority of the Books of Scripture, has been conveyed to us by the most clear and universal Tradition. And on the Resolution of this, must stand or fall the Truth of my Position,
and

and Arguments against an Infallible Guide, or of his Objection, viz. That they equally overthrow the Authority of Scripture; For if the Scriptures have come down to us by so clear and uninterrupted a Tradition, as is sufficient to give us a Certainty of their Authority, then my Arguments cannot be turned against them; but if, on the other Hand, the Doctrine of the Infallibility of the Church, as a Guide, was not capable of being, or has not been, convey'd to us by such a Tradition as can give us a Certainty, then there is all Reason to require a plain Proof of it from the written Infallible Word of God; and so my Arguments will stand good against a Living Guide, tho' not against the Scriptures, unless it must follow, that if we can't be certain of some one thing without a Divine Revelation, that therefore we cannot be certain of another, or of any thing without Revelation; which, I suppose the Gentleman would not have me take for a good Conclusion, and, I assure him, I did not take it for a Principle.

But the Ground on which I went, was indeed that in which, he says the Cavil lies, viz. That Tradition is no express Proof of the Infallibility of the Church, i. e. of that Part which stood to the Successor of the chief of the Apostles, or rather that we have no sufficient Tradition of it; and therefore

I expected, that after he had turn'd my Arguments against Scripture, and, as I observ'd, suppos'd them good, so applied, that he would have shewn them to be groundless Cavils against a Living Guide, by producing a better, or, if that were too hard a Task, as good a Tradition, for the Infallibility of that Part of the Church which adheres to St. Peter's Successor, as we have for the Authority of the Scriptures. But instead of that, he only urges the establish'd Subordinations in the Church, the constant Exercise of Authority by Church Guides, and the Submission of the Faithful to them; All which I had obviated, by enquiring, How such Subordinations (even supposing them of Divine Institution) and such Exercise of Authority accordingly, would any more prove the Superior in Number or Dignity infallible, than the like Constitution of other Bodies proves them to be so; of which he takes no Notice, and only says, Now that all this should be granted of Divine Institution, (though by the way, I only suppos'd, by no means granted it) this Obligation of Subordination and Submission, laid upon all by God's express Order; if it do not infer that those who conform to it, shall not be misled by it into Error, I am to learn what can. And if this is a good Answer I have learn'd what I did not know before.

viz.

viz.
all
an C fion Subj
this it, sh
am I
from fallib
libly
ed to ough
ablo
der beyo
trary
we
we selv
this
Civ
will
Lim
on dou
may ed
tick
ing
the

viz. That all Sovereign Princes, nay, that all Parents are Infallible; for there is an Obligation of Subordination and Submission to them, laid upon all Children and Subjects, by God's express Order; But if this do not infer, that those who conform to it, shall not be misled by it into Error, yet am I not to learn what can; a plain Promise from God, that such Superiors shall be infallible in all their Commands, would infallibly bear that Inference; but till he is pleased to give us such a Promise, they must (for ought I see) be contented that we pay them absolute Obedience in all things that fall under their Jurisdiction; but if they will go beyond that, by commanding any thing contrary to the Word or Will of God, in that we must not obey them, and consequently we must have a Liberty of judging for our selves, whether they do so or not. Now if this is true with Relation to our Natural and Civil Governors (as I believe every Body will allow that it is) why is not the same Limitation as consistent with our Obligation of obeying Spiritual Governors? No doubt, this Liberty of judging for our selves may be abus'd in all those Relations; wicked Children and Rebels, as well as Heretics, may make this a Pretence for throwing off their Duty; but that does not make the Rule less true, or hinder those from being justified by it, who act sincerely in it.

But I seem to grant, (he says) that the Arguments for infallible Church Authority prove, that it is fit, that it is necessary there shou'd be such, from whence he forms this Syllogism, Christ settled in his Church, what ever was fit and necessary for its Preservation; but such is (as is granted) an Infallible Authority; Ergo, Christ settled an Infallible Authority in his Church. I know not how the Gentleman came so much to mistake my Meaning, for I do not find that my Words give him any Occasion for it, but if they had done so, in that one Place, by some Negligence or Obscurity in the Expression, methinks the Principles on which I argue all along, might have led him to examine with a little more Care, whether the Words would not bear some other Sense, less inconsistent with the rest of my Letter. But indeed the Place taken by it self, would be very gross Nonsense, if it were meant as he understands it; just as much as if I had said, It is necessary that there should be an Infallible Authority in the Church, but we cannot be secur'd from Error by submitting to it, unless that Infallible Authority is Infallible. Now if the Gentleman will believe I did not intend this profound Reasoning, he will find that my Words cou'd have no other Meaning, than, That those Arguments ta- ken

ken
from ting
for P
some
that
For h ments
submi
Order
could thenc
canno
to fu
and
must if it m blishe
fit or for to
as sup
but f all th
will b
vern
that v
Gove
tural
W
are n
on a l

ken from the Practice of the Church, and from the Reasonableness of Inferiors submitting to Superiors, or the Minor to the Major Part, prove only that there should be some Government in the Church, but not that those Governors should be Infallible. For how else could I say, that those Arguments might prove a Fitness or Necessity of submitting to Superiors, for the Security of Order and Union; yet such Submission could be no Security against Error, and from thence conclude as I do, that therefore we cannot be absolutely, in all things obliged to such Submission, because though Order and Union are very valuable Things, Truth must not be sacrificed to them. And thus, if it must be concluded that Christ has established in his Church what ever I might think fit or necessary (not to its Preservation, for to that I have not granted, or so much as suppos'd that any Authority is necessary) but for the Security of Order and Union, all that can follow from what I have said, will be, that Christ has establish'd some Government in the Church; but as I observ'd, that will no more prove that our Spiritual Governors are Infallible, than that our Natural or Civil Governors are so.

Well then, since such Inferences as these, are not likely to satisfy one who wou'd build on a Divine Promise of an Infallible Guide,

John 20.
V. 31.

with a Rule given by Christ or his Apostles, how to know this Guide in Case of Divisions; of which I had urg'd that they said never a Word; the Gentleman answers, That this is groundlessly said, and asks, By what Rule I know that Christ, or his Apostles, said never a Word of it; is every thing they said writ down in Scripture? To which I reply, No certainly, for of this I have a very good Rule to be assured, viz. The Scriptures telling me so: And if he cou'd give me as good a Rule how to know what they said which was not written, I wou'd willingly submit to it. But methinks the same Evangelist who assures us, that Jesus did many Things which were not written, when he adds, but these are written that you may believe; seems to imply, that succeeding Ages could not have sufficient Certainty to ground their Belief on, if they had not been written. However, if the Gentleman will not allow this Inference, if he will think, that tho' the Evangelists profess to write that we might believe, and that believing we might have Life, yet that they needed not to have writ for that End, nor did writ all that was necessary to it; but that this very necessary Point, of a Rule how to know our Guide, was one of the things which they omitted to write; yet I hope he will not in earnest expect an Answer

swer
that
of in suffi
fame
is, a
is no
of su
they allow
A
main
Pro
lity
of D
of th
must
fame
stant
Scrip
from
for c seeks ment
leave whic
him whet
IF
Grou
Subo
ton

swer to his Question, How shall I know that Christ or his Apostles said not a Word of it. Every one knows that a Negative sufficiently proves it self; at least it is the same to us, if it does not appear that a thing is, as if it were not; the Question therefore is not, how I know that they did not speak of such a Rule, but how I can know that they did; and till that is prov'd, I may be allowed to suppose they did not.

And now if the Gentleman thinks fit to maintain, That Tradition is an expressive Proof (as his Words are) of the Infallibility of that Part, which adhere (in Case of Divisions) to the Successor of the chief of the Apostles. Let him consider, that he must support their Infallibility with the same moral Arguments, on which Protestants believe the Divine Authority of the Scriptures; (though I might exact stronger from him, who supposes those not sufficient for our Belief of Scriptures; but to one who seeks the Victory of Truth alone, Arguments equally strong will suffice) And I beg leave to give him a short View of the Task, which such an Undertaking wou'd engage him in, that he may the more easily judge whether it can be perform'd or not.

If then he wou'd maintain on moral Grounds, the Divine Institution of all the Subordinations in the Church, and the Infallibility of Superiors, from their exercising Authority, with the Submission of the Faithful to their Decisions, He may be pleased to consider, whether he can affirm, that it is morally impossible that such Subordinations cou'd ever have been establish'd, if they had not been instituted by Christ, or his Apostles; or, that when they were establish'd, that it was impossible for the Superiors to extend their Authority to things in which they had none; or that their Inferiors shou'd submit to their Decisions, without believing them infallible: But if none of these Things are morally impossible, (which all the Subordinations that are in any Human Society, all the Encroachments on the Privileges of Subjects, and all the Exercise of Authority in Civil Governments, that have ever been submitted to in the World, abundantly evince that they are not) Then such Exercise of Authority, with the Submission of Inferiors, are not so good Grounds for our Believing the Infallibility of Superiors, or their Divine Institution, as we have for the Authority of the Scriptures; For no Instance can be produced to confute the Assurance we have, from the Nature of Things, and of Mankind, that the Scriptures could never have been receiv'd, as Books written by inspired Men, if the first Christians to whom they were delivered, had not

not
then
their fart
Boo
earl
so m
sten
succ
mon
com verf
quer
Nam
even con
Mar
entl
ful
fuch
ture
if th ditio
Chu
imp
been
by
ther &tri red,

not known the great Facts contain'd in them to be true ; which Facts prov'd that their Authors were divinely assisted ; and farther, that it is morally impossible, that Books of such Importance, which were so early dispers'd into all Parts, and on which so many Eyes were, in all Corners of Christendom, cou'd have been corrupted in any succeeding Age ; those Books being read among all Christians, from the Apostles Time, constantly appeal'd to in all their Controversies, and most of them having never been question'd to be written by those whose Names they bear, but were own'd as such, even by the Enemies of the Religion they contain. These are Grounds, on which all Mankind are agreed, that we may be sufficiently certain of the Author, and the faithful Conveyance of a Book ; but they are such, as perhaps nothing, of any other Nature whatsoever, is capable of. However, if the Gentleman would apply them to a traditional Doctrine of the Infallibility of the Church ; if he will say, That 'tis equally impossible that this Doctrine could ever have been received, unless it had been delivered by the Apostles ; or, that being delivered by them, it is morally impossible that a Doctrine of such Importance could be corrupted, misunderstood, or misrepresented, in any.

any succeeding Age : Let him observe first, That there is nothing in this Doctrine, that answers to those Facts contain'd in the Scriptures, which serve so well to assure us of their Divine Authority, being of such a Nature, as the first Christians cou'd not be mistaken in, and which by receiving these Books they attested to ; an Advantage that no unwritten Doctrine can pretend to, by which to prove it self of Divine Original : And next, Let him consider, how the Doctrines of the Millennium, and that of the Necessity of the Eucharist for Infants, came to be received as Apostolical Traditions, so Early and so Generally as they were : How those many Traditions, by which the Jews made the Word of GOD of none Effect, were receiv'd among them as deliver'd by Moses : And lastly, How that most important Doctrine, of the Being of One God, truly deliver'd to our Fathers, was corrupted and lost, in the Polytheism and Idolatry of almost the whole World ; tho' when Men liv'd to see the third and fourth Generation, there was far greater Advantages than since, for conveying an unwritten Doctrine securely.

Mark 7.
13.

If then these General Propositions cannot be maintain'd, to support the Doctrine of a Living infallible Guide ; and He wou'd venture the Matter on this particular one,
That

That
rupted
Doctr
Script

He Eviden
those we ca conve
ly, an can a thou'd great such Chur
Easte
mony
great
not t lastly ons a
the alone
Pope
Coun
whe
of T cord
or b Gho
ther

That in Fact we have as clear, uninterrupted, and universal a Tradition of this Doctrine, as we have of the Authority of Scriptures ;

He may be pleas'd to consider, first, What Evidence we can have of that, without those General Propositions, that is, How we can be certain, that any Thing has been convey'd to us, through many Ages, clearly, and without any Alteration, unless we can affirm, that it is morally impossible it shou'd be otherwise. Next, Whether the great Number of Christians, who own no such Tradition (as those of the Greek Church, and of the more Southern and Eastern Parts, who yet do all give Testimony to the Scriptures) will not be a great Prejudice against such an Assertion. not to say a plain Confutation of it. And lastly, Whether the many different Opinions about this Infallible Guide, even among the Assertors of it, as, Whether the Pope alone is Infallible, or a Council without the Pope, or with him, or neither Pope, nor Council, but the Church diffusive ; and whether this is by a continued Conveyance of Tradition from one Age to another (according to Mr. Serjeant and his Disciples) or by a perpetual Assistance of the Holy Ghost, as is more generally taught. Whether, I say, these various Opinions of the In-

Infalible Guide, are not Proofs, That this Doctrine has no more come down to us by any clear, or certain, than it has by an universal Tradition.

And if on all these Considerations it shou'd appear, that we cannot have an equal Certainty of the Infallibility of the Church, as of the Scriptures, by Tradition; (as I doubt not to affirm, that there never was so clear, so uninterrupted a Tradition for any Thing, as that which conveys the Scriptures to us) Then it will follow, that my Arguments cannot justly be turn'd against the Scriptures, tho' they are good against a Living Infalible Guide; which is what I was to shew, and consequently that I had Reason to require a plain Proof of such a Guide, from the written Word of God.

2 Thess.
2^d 15.

But we are exhorted, in the last Paragraph, Not to forget what the Holy Ghost inspired St. Paul to record, to stand fast, and hold the Traditions we have been taught, whether by Word of Mouth, or Writings Apostolical; which Text being often brought to prove, that the Scriptures are not our only Rule of Faith, I wou'd not omit to consider it in particular, and it may not be improper here. St. Paul charges the Thessalonians, to hold what they had been taught, either by Word, or his Epistle, not by Writings Apostolical, which seems

seems be the
by th
that
Paul
Thin
no do
Chri
whic
to ho
Apos
But p
in th whic
rance
there
not b
after
That
that
some
parti
yet
there
Cath
tion
in th
Now
shou
shew
are

seems artfully substituted, that St Paul may be thought to include all that was written by the Apostles, from which Text I see not that any thing can be prov'd, but that St. Paul had taught the Thessalonians some Things, which were not in his Epistle, as no doubt he taught them all the Doctrine of Christ, all that is contain'd in the Gospels; which they were certainly as much oblig'd to hold, when they receiv'd it from the Apostle's Mouth, as if it had been written: But perhaps it will be urg'd, that St. Paul in this Chapter is speaking of Traditions, which were never written, as of the Hindrance of the coming of Antichrist; and that therefore the Exhortation in the Text must not belong only to such Traditions as were afterwards written. To which I answer, That supposing this Argument good, and that the Thessalonians were oblig'd to hold some Traditions which were never written, particularly that concerning Antichrist; yet if they have not performed their Duty therein; if not only they, but the whole Catholic Church, has suffer'd this Tradition to be intirely lost, so that to no Church in the World it can be said at this Day — Now you know what withholdeth that he shou'd be reveal'd, &c. This can only shew, how much more faithfully Traditions are kept, by Writings, than by Word of Mouth;

Mouth; since we only know, that there was some Hindrance of the coming of Antichrist, because so much is written; but what that Hindrance was, we know not, because it was not written: And so of all the Miracles which our Saviour did, those few only which are written, are preserv'd and believ'd; those infinitely more, which St. John tells us he did, that were not written, are intirely forgot; and therefore tho' the first Christians, who saw and heard those Things, might be oblig'd to hold them, yet we cannot be so, who have no possible Means of knowing them: But since there was so great Danger, as appears by the Things mention'd in these Texts, that what was trusted to Oral Tradition, should be absolutely lost, have we not great Reason to conclude, that God in his Providence took Care, that all that was necessary to be believ'd, shou'd be plainly written; and that among them we shall find some Direction to a Living Infalible Guide, (if such a Guide was design'd us) that we may believe, and that believing we may have Life. —

Nothing then remains, but to examine what the Gentleman has said against the Sense in which I understand those Texts of Scripture, which are usually urg'd in this Question: But, What are we now to do?

Judg-

Judgi
Scrip
it, or fess I
that judge
to ag
not i prete
neces
ing a
be, I Tha
But
unde
Scrip
by t
post
not
in
Wo
cou
they
are
tha
the per por
the tho
not

Judging for my self of the Meaning of Scripture, is it seems an Offence against it, or as he calls it, ruling my Rule; I confess I did think the Use of a Rule to be, that those to whom it is a Rule, shou'd judge by it, whether such Things as ought to agree with it, do so, or not; and I did not imagine that it was a Presumption, to pretend to understand our Rule, so far as is necessary to that End; or that understanding a Rule, is ruling the Rule; which if it be, How can a Rule be of any Use to us? That is, indeed, How can it be a Rule? But why is it that private Persons cannot understand such Things as seem plain in the Scriptures? Were those Things understood by the People, when our Saviour or his Apostles spoke them? If they were, Cou'd not the Evangelists write the same Things, in Words as intelligible, or in the same Words in which they were spoke? If they cou'd, What Reason is there to doubt that they wou'd? Or, to think the same Things are less intelligible when they are written, than when they were spoken? 'Tis true the Scriptures have been misunderstood, or perverted, and that in Matters of great Importance; but this is no Argument, that they are not plain in such Things, for those who have misinterpreted them, have not done it, by adhering to the plain and obvious obvious Sense of them; but, either by expounding plain Texts, in a different Sense from the most literal Meaning of them; when there was nothing in the known Nature of the Thing, that requir'd it; Or, by determining obscure Texts, to a certain Sense, as agreed best with their Prejudices: And perhaps there are none more in Danger of being misled by these Means, than those who submit their Judgments to a Church, that professes to have another Rule besides the Scriptures, by which they may rule this Rule; however, all the Mistakes about the Meaning of Scripture only shew the great Danger, of being too Careless, too Curious, or any way Byass'd in studying them; for as they must be very liable to Err, who will too curiously search into Things not plainly reveal'd, or who establish Articles of Faith on obscure Texts; so there is nothing so plain, that a Mind strongly prejudic'd may not pervert, or a negligent Person misunderstand. My Letter, I presume, does not need an Infallible Interpreter, tho' the Gentleman for want of a little Care, has mistaken my Meaning in more Places than I have mention'd.

But after all, whatever may be said against judging for our selves, How is it avoidable in the Question we are upon? I am enquiring for a Living Infallible Guide, and

am

am to there
and d when
that t
then,
judge
those how
the C
I mu which give
them
stand ing in
is an must
Inter
and is th
I-kn
unle
my any ptur
or h
we
they
of t

am told, that the Scriptures assure me there is such a Guide; I am very glad of it, and desire to see this in the Scriptures; when the Texts are produc'd, I do not find that they express any such Matter: What then, says the Gentleman, you must not judge for your self, what the Sense is of those Texts; I then desire him to tell me, how I shall know, whether they mean that the Church is an infallible Guide or not, if I must not judge of their Meaning. To which I know not what Answer He can give me, but this, That I must understand them in the Sense that the Church understands them in: But I reply, I am searching in the Scriptures, whether the Church is an Infallible Interpreter of them or not, must I then believe that She is an Infallible Interpreter, because the Scriptures say so, and believe the Scriptures say so, because she is their Infallible Interpreter? For my part, I know not how to get out of this Circle, unless I may take the Liberty of judging for my self; and indeed, to what Purpose are any Arguments brought either from Scripture or Tradition, for an Infallible Guide; or how shou'd we be convinc'd by them, if we must not judge for our selves what Force they are of? Let us then take a Review of those Texts of Scripture I had mention'd,

with

with his Objections against the Sense in which I understand them.

John 16.
13.

The first I remark'd on was that of St. John, which is always apply'd to the Church; and in which there is a plain Promise of Infallibility, to those to whom it is spoke; but I had observ'd, that there is no more Reason to extend one Part of the Promise, viz. that the Spirit should lead them into all Truth, to the Successors of the Apostles, than the other, that He should shew them Things to come, which is not pretended to belong to them; and to this the Gentleman did not think fit to give any Answer.

See Deut.
13. 17.
Epist. to Philem.

On the Promises in St. Matth. and St. John, of our Saviour's being with them to the End of the World, and the Spirit's abiding with them for ever, I had observ'd first, That such Expressions are frequently us'd in the Scriptures, when they must be taken in a restrain'd Sense, not to signify Eternally, but Perpetually, to the End of their Lives to whom they are spoken. To this He says nothing, but I added, That how far, or to whomsoever these Words may be extended, a Promise of being with any one, signify'd Assistance and Protection, but not Infallibility; and the Reason I gave for saying so, was, That that Expression is us'd in several Places of Scripture, for a Promise mise of God's Protection to his People. This, he says, is a poor Shift to evade the Force of those Terms. Whereas I thought, that examining in what Sense, an Expression found in one Text, is used in other Places of Scripture, is so far from being a Shift to evade, that it is the best Shift we can make, to find out the Importance of any disputed Expression: But it seems, that what those Terms signify in other Places, is not the Rule of their Meaning here, unless I can prove, that they do not signify something else here, when CHRIST employs them to express his consolatory Promises to his sorrowful Church. This Task of proving, that a Thing is not said, or what it does not mean, the Gentleman is frequently putting me upon: But I hope he will think me a little more reasonable, if I rather require of him to prove, that those Terms do signify something else here; for till that is done, their Meaning in other Places, will be a very good Rule to judge by of their Meaning here, tho' employ'd to express Christ's consolatory Promises to his afflicted Church: For why, I pray, can nothing but a Promise of Infallibility comfort her? Are not God's Promises of Assistance and Protection, sufficiently Consolatory to her? If He thinks so, I shou'd be tempted to desire a Proof from him,

D

that

that they are not; but, I hope, he has higher Thoughts of such Divine Favours, than to attempt That, or to need any Proof from me that they are. If then a Promise of God's Assistance and Protection, may be a consolatory Promise to his sorrowful Church, and that those Expressions of God's being with any one, of his never leaving or forsaking them, do in other Places signify his Providence in assisting and protecting them, but not Infallibility (tho' they may signify here a more than ordinary Providence; for I did not intend that Word in so strict a Sense, as he seems to take it,) but what Reason is there to think, they have a different Signification here, when Christ employs them to comfort his sorrowful Church? Is there not rather all Reason to think they have not, unless, as I said, it be plainly prov'd, that they must signify something else here?

Matth. 18.

17.

On that Expression in St. Matthew, Tell the Church, he says, I am too bold in affirming, that it is meant of private Differences in Civil Matters, and that Heathen and Publican signify no more than a Man sued at the King's-Bench. As to that Part, Let him be to thee as a Heathen, or a Publican, I was the less exact in expressing my Thoughts of it, because my Subject only requir'd me to observe, what Kind of Matters

Mat
refer thof
ces
be p
not gnifi
Kin
the
was,
very
Jew
were Men
Be
our wha
I w
our
pass
Inju
ther
and
judg
firm
wha
in su
did haps
prov
some

Matters our Saviour there enjoins them to refer to the Church : But when I said, that those who refus'd to submit their Differences to the Judgment of the Church, might be prosecuted in Temporal Courts, I did not mean that Heathen and Publican, signified no more than a Man sued at the King's-Bench ; but on the contrary, that the Reason why He might be so prosecuted, was, because he was to be look'd on as a very ill, and incorrigible Man, (such as the Jews thought the Heathens and Publicans were) and no longer to be consider'd as a Member of the Church.

But as to the Matters, which our Saviour commands them to refer to the Church, whatever the Gentleman thinks he means, I would appeal even to himself, whether our Saviour's Words, If thy Brother trespass against thee, are not usually spoken of Injuries done by one Man to another, either in his Goods, Person or Reputation ; and if they are so, let any indifferent Person judge, whether there is most Boldness in affirming, as I do, that our Saviour meant what he said, and meant nothing else ; or in supposing, as he does, that our Saviour did not mean, what he did say : But perhaps it may be again requir'd of me to prove, that the Words here do not mean something else, than they us'd to signify in other Places, a Task I desire to be excused from. However, tho' it is more than necessary, I will offer at something like a Proof, that our Saviour did intend what he did say, i. e. that private Differences should be referred to the Judgment of the Church, or that Assembly of Christians which the contending Persons were Members of: For why else does St. Paul so severely blame the Corinthians, for going to Law before the Unjust, and not before the Saints. And v. 6. But Brother goeth to Law with Brother, and that before the Unbelievers. I suppose it will not be said, that it was about Matters of Faith, that St. Paul reproves them for going before the Unbelievers; and whether it was on the Account of any Infallible Authority in the Church, that he would have them submit their Differences to the Judgment of the Saints, or only for fear of giving Scandal to Unbelievers, let the whole Discourse determine, particularly observing the 5th Verse, Is it so, that there is not one wise Man among you? No not one that shall be able to judge between his Brethren? And Verse 7. Now therefore there is utterly a Fault among you, because ye go to Law one with another: Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do you not rather suffer your selves to be defrauded? It seems then St. Paul would

1 Cor. 6.
1.

would
the
they better
one.
Very Scand
were
Wor
the
ther
Hyp
I
fider
in t his not
Gen
I ca
I l don
low
vai
it i
not
Th
To
ten
in
ry,
by

would have them bring their Causes before the Saints, or (Tell the Church) not because they could not judge amiss, but because it was better to submit to the Decision of any one, tho' least esteem'd in the Church, as Verse 4. or to take wrong, than to give Scandal by their Quarrels, to those that were without. And why our Saviour's Words, which seem so plainly to express the same Thing, must be understood in another Sense, I see no Reason but to serve an Hypothesis.

I come now to the last Text I had consider'd, which is the first taken Notice of in the Answer. viz. Christ's Promise to his Church, That the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against her. And here the Gentleman desires it should be observ'd, how I cavil at the Term Prevail, which he says I like not, and assigns a Reason why I don't like it, because, says he, If 'tis allow'd that the Church shall not be prevailed upon by the Powers of Hell, then it is clear Error (a Hellish Power) shall not prevail against her, which is the same Thing as that she shall not fall into Error. To this I answer, first, That I did not intend to cavil at the Word, by saying, that in the Original it signify'd an entire Victory, but only to express what I understood by it: And Next, That if I had done so, it it wou'd have been upon some better Reason than to avoid the Consequences of it; for I assure him, I have no more laid it down for a Principle, That the Church is not Infallible, than I would have others do, that she is Infallible: But I began my Search with a full Perswasion, that my Eternal Salvation depended on my judging with Sincerity of the Arguments on both Sides, especially of those which are urg'd from the Holy Scriptures. But whether the Gentleman will believe this, or not, he might have seen by my Reasoning on this Text, towards the End of my Letter, that I needed not to cavil at the Word Prevail, for fear of the Consequence he draws from it; for it is there very plain, that I do not allow that Consequence; so far am I from taking Errors prevailing against the Church, to be the same thing with her falling into Error, that I have there suppos'd, that dangerous Errors may be in the Church, whilst she retains all Truths necessary to Salvation; and then I enquire, how, whilst she retains all such Truths (tho' with a Mixture of many Errors) the Gates of Hell (supposing that to mean Error) can be said to prevail against her; so that I cou'd not cavil at the Term, Prevail, to avoid a Consequence which I did not, nor do yet see; and if he had a mind to convince me of it, he shou'd

not

not h
firm.
That
the C vail
says
shou'
cease
that Faith
that there
Doct
laita neou
The Fra
have mini Erro
each
may
Gat
thou
not lenn rist
gene
then
If no
Hell

not have thought it sufficient barely to affirm, what I had desir'd a Proof of, viz. That if ever any Error shou'd be received in the Church, the Gates of Hell would prevail against her. 'Tis plain indeed, as he says in another Place, That if ever she shou'd make Shipwreck of her Faith, she ceases to be a Church; but it is not so plain, that every Error is a Shipwreck of the Faith. The Church of Pergamos is told, that she had not denied the Faith, though there were a few things against her, the Doctrine of Balaam, and that of the Nicolaitans, which doubtless was a very Erroneous one, since Christ says he hates it: The Jesuits, the Dominicans, and the Franciscans, will be allowed, I suppose, to have kept the Faith; and yet either the Dominicans, or the other two, must hold an Error, since they hold Things contrary to each other; and why the whole Church may not as well keep the Faith (and so the Gates of Hell not prevail against her) though she should hold some Errors, I see not. Were not the Doctrines of the Millennium, and of the Necessity of the Eucharist for Infants, Errors, which once were generally receiv'd in the Church? Had then the Gates of Hell prevail'd against her? If not, then the Promise that the Gates of Hell shall not prevail against the Church, is not

Revel. 2.

v. 13, 14,

15.

not the same, as that she shall not fall into Error, notwithstanding Errors being (as he tells us) a Hellish Power. And I desire the Gentleman to consider, whether by insisting on the Word Hell, making it to signify Error, as a Hellish Power, according to the Importance of that Word in English, he has not given me just Occasion to cavil at that Term? unless he thinks the Meaning of the Word in the Original, is not the Rule of its Meaning here; for no doubt he is not to learn, that the Word translated Hell, has not the same Signification in the Original, as the Term Hell, commonly stands for in our Language; and if by Hell, should be understood the Grave; and by the Gates to it, Death or Destruction, what would become of his Hellish Power? But let that Phrase signify what Powers he pleases (as it very likely includes every Power that would oppose the Church) the Promise plainly is, that none of them shou'd overcome, or destroy her; for what else is to prevail against her? Nor is this Sense, I suppose, disallowed by him; the Difference between us, is rather in this, That he thinks the Church is destroyed, or that she ceases to be a Church, if she has any Error in her; and that therefore that Promise includes, that she shall not err. Whereas I do not see, but that the Building may remain firm enough

enough on its Foundation, and lose nothing Essential to it, though Wood, and Hay, and Stubble, should be superadded; and till it is proved, that every Error destroys the ^{1 Cor. 3.} Being of the Church, that Text will make nothing for her Infallibility. Thus I have enlarg'd on my Reasons for that Sense, in which I understand those Places of Scripture that are chiefly urged in this Question; and I dare appeal to Roman Catholics themselves, whether they would not have understood them in the same Sense, if they had not first laid down for a Principle, that they must believe them in the Sense they are taught by their Infallible Church; and whether that be a right Disposition, for seeking the true Meaning of those Texts, from which we would learn if she is infallible, or not, let any unprejudiced Person judge. And now I think all that is material, has been spoke to, for I have shewn, First, That his chief Argument, why Protestants should own the Church Infallible in all her Decisions, is built on a wrong Supposition, viz. that they believe her Infallible in all her Decisions concerning Scripture, which since they do not, that Argument which runs through the whole Paper, is of no Force. Secondly, I have shewn, That his great Objection to my Arguments against an Infallible Guide, viz. That they E c ally

equally overthrow the Infallibility of Scripture, nether is just, or if it were, would be of any Use toward establishing the Authority of the Church; on the Contrary, I have shewn that by supposing (as he plainly does) that my Arguments are good against the Scriptures, he has overthrown the Infallible Authority of the Church; for he has not pretended to a greater Evidence from Tradition of the Infallibility of the Church, than we have of the Divine Authority of Scripture; and I have maintain'd, that we cannot have an equal Evidence of it from Tradition: So that, if my Arguments are good against the Scriptures, they are certainly good against the Infallibility of the Church; and if they are not good against the Scriptures (as I have shewn they are not) then his Objection is groundless, and either way my Arguments will remain in their full Force against a Living Infallible Guide; this Objection being so unlucky, as to do his Cause no Service, whether true or false. And thus the Authority of the Church being again reduced to a Trial by Scripture, I have shewn, Thirdly, That the Sense in which I understand the Texts urged for her Infallibility, is the most plain and obvious Sense of them, according to the usual Signification of the Words (which is St. Austine's Rule to understand them by, when

when
or in and n
Texts
Sense
Task
Word
of Bo
gnify
the m
be lin
said.
a Liv
ction
any tain
An
ject
entri quen
have Gui
tion
ther
the
of t Tha
diffe
tion
ship
very

when there is nothing in that Sense absurd, or impious, to force us to seek another) and no Proof has been offer'd, that these Texts ought to be understood in another Sense; but I am put on the unreasonable Task of proving in one Place, that the Words do not; and in another, am accused of Boldness for affirming, that they do signify, what they us'd to stand for; and to the most important, which I had shewn must be limited to the Apostles, nothing at all is said. So that I am as far to seek as ever for a Living infallible Guide, finding no Direction to such a Guide in the Scriptures, nor any Tradition sufficient to give a Moral Certainty of it.

And now (tho' it is foreign to my Subject yet being greatly to my Purpose in entering on it) I would mention a Consequence I draw from the little Certainty I have found in the Arguments for a Living Guide; which is, That finding it most Rational, to take the Scriptures for our Guide, there seems to me much greater Safety in the Communion of Protestants, than in that of the Church of Rome, for this Reason, That in all those Practices, by which they differ in their Way of Worship, as Adoration of the Host, Prayer to Saints, Worship of Images, Half-Communion, &c. Every ordinary Understanding may see, that these these Things are not plainly contained in the Scriptures, and that therefore they cannot be necessary, which the Church of Rome allows they are not; whereas nothing less than an Infalible Interpreter, can assure us, that they are not contrary to the Scripture, and consequently very dangerous.

F I N I S.

the
not me
efs
is,
re,